Save Your Hands

On March 3rd, one of our employees badly injured his right hand. This employee along with a co-worker was mixing a batch of structolite. The operator of the drill was not getting all the dry material mixed into the wet material. Our employee reached down to push the mud mixer into the dry material when the spinning shaft grabbed his glove covered hand and quickly twisted his index and middle fingers to the back side of his hand. Needless to say, this took more than a bandage to repair. The injured worker was taken to the ER where emergency surgery was performed. Ligaments were reattached, knuckles pinned to prevent movement and sutures were used to close the wound. Our employee stated that it happened so fast and he does not know why he would ever have placed his hand in a dangerous situation.

Take the time and think before putting your hands in harms way.

Last week's Bonus Question: When will we be getting our camo hooded sweatshirts?
